Ion trap mass spectrometry of peptides in complex mixtures using neutral loss scanning with a BNA3 ion-trap mass spectrometer. The use of neutral loss scanning for peptide ion isolation and MS/MS analysis is demonstrated using a multi-taper ion-trap instrument based on the BNA3 ion funnel system. The instrument is a linear quadrupole ion-trap mass spectrometer whose increased tunability and unique ion-optics characteristics allow the scan to be programmed to retain  $m/z$  values for neutral loss of the target ions by the use of resonance ejection ions formed in the ion funnel of the instrument. Peptide composition analysis is performed without the need to deactivate the ion trap prior to insertion of the individual peptide ions.
