However, it seems that ffmpeg has a default of -preset ultrafast, which results in a video with a very poor overall quality. So, is it possible to set a RED encoder preset using -preset or is there a better option? A: Keep in mind that the "movie.mp4" file MUST have an H.264 bitstream as its input, not just a compressed H.264 video file (as ffmpeg will try to decode it using the first encoder it finds if no parameter is specified). Having an H.264 input makes the process a lot simpler, as the H.264 bitstreams produced by the RED encoder will play in VLC. Here is the command you can use, assuming your "movie.mp4" file has an H.264 output: ffmpeg -i "movie.mp4" -c:v h264 -movflags +faststart -b:v 512k -s:v 1280x720 -pix_fmt yuv420p "output.mp4" // Jest Snapshot v1, exports[`ExerciseImage should not render the image unless the width is greater than 200px 1`] = `
