The Facebook mania is picking up pace again. With regular updates on the upcoming changes in the social networking site and the wild fluctuations of its stock price, users of the site are now all too well aware of what may become their next status: 'I'm leaving Facebook'. Users are increasingly tired of Facebook, even with the increased restrictions on what they can say and the easy availability of alternative social networking services. We've seen friends and families de-friending one another, deleting their Facebook accounts and even criticizing the site for its privacy and content issues. A new analysis has revealed Facebook's planned privacy changes, from its regular Beacon system, along with its need for companies to disclose how they use user data. The news is such that even though the site has been a massive business for Facebook and they are currently making
